Job Description:

The program in Peace and Justice Studies at Wellesley College is seeking outstanding candidates for a two-year position in Conflict Resolution/Conflict Transformation.

The successful candidate's annual five-course teaching program would include a mid-level course in this area, sections of our introductory course and upper-level courses on specific topics related to the candidate's research.

We are especially, but not exclusively, interested in candidates whose conflict resolution research focuses on gender issues.

This is an experimental position, created in response to a recent external review of the Program.

The Program may decide to request a permanent position to follow on from this experiment.

Applications should include a cover letter, addressed to Professor Lawrence Rosenwald, a curriculum vita, a graduate school transcript, examples of research, a brief statement about the candidate's teaching experience, teaching evaluations (if available) and names/email addresses of three references (The final letters should also be addressed to Professor Lawrence Rosenwald).
