Curator of Global Indigenous Art and Lifeways

Spencer Museum of Art

Position Overview

The Spencer Museum of Art at the University of Kansas stewards and supports broad public engagement with a collection of more than 48,000 works of art created across a wide range of time periods, geographic locations, and cultural affiliations. The Museum seeks a Curator responsible for the collaborative stewardship, care, and accessibility of the approximately 9,300 objects and supporting materials (62% North and Central American, 15% African, 9% South American, and 14% Asian, Oceanic, and European) that comprise the collection of Global Indigenous art. This collection encompasses historical and more contemporary artworks across mediums that came to the Museum through a variety of channels, often by people associated with the University. More recent museum purchases have expanded the collection in ways that insert Indigenous art into global dialogues about art, environment, culture, and social change. Integral to the position, the Curator of Global Indigenous Art and Lifeways will actively engage contemporary Indigenous knowledge keepers and community members to build lasting relationships and integrate their voices, perspectives, and beliefs into museum practices and programming.

Universities (AAU). The University enrolls more than 28,000 students representing all 50 states and 112 countries.

At the University of Kansas, diversity, equity, inclusion, and belonging are an important part of our culture and university strategic plan. Applications from members of underrepresented groups are encouraged. The successful candidate must be eligible to work in the U.S. by the effective date of the appointment.

Job Description

The Curator will make Indigenous art and ways of knowing and being more visible and prominent, assert Indigenous priorities, and develop innovative, exploratory, and expansive curatorial practices. Driven by a community-centered approach and methodology of team-based collaboration that includes the core tenets of respect, reciprocity, and relationship-building, the Curator will contribute to developing inter-relational ways of working, opening museum spaces to other voices, implementing listening practices, and activating community engagement and our collective imagination for a just future. The person in this position must bring a deep cultural sensitivity to their work with people and art to build relationships grounded in trust. Among the many potential partners for collaboration at KU are the Indigenous Studies Program, the Museum Studies Program, the Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies, the Kansas African Studies Center, the departments of African and African American Studies, geography and atmospheric sciences, visual art, art history, and anthropology, in addition to the First Nations Student Association, Native American Initiatives, and the Indigenous Arts Initiative. Other important local partners include neighboring Haskell Indian Nations University and a number of regional Native communities.

Job Duties

- Provide expertise about and conduct research on the collection; encourage and support collection research, including by descendent community members.
- Maintain an active program of community-engaged scholarship with Indigenous communities.
- Collaborate with faculty, staff, students, Indigenous communities, and other public constituencies to meaningfully integrate Indigenous art and culture into the teaching and research mission of the University.
- Initiate, collaborate on, and contribute to grant proposals and funded project management.
- Participate in intellectual life of the Museum and University as well as professional and intellectual discourse related to global Indigenous art and the museum profession.
- Remain current with changes in museums in the international environment, including legal and ethical issues, and participate in the development of more expansive reparative approaches with Indigenous communities.

Collection Stewardship, Care, and Development (25%)

- Develop meaningful relationships and collaborative practices with Indigenous communities for stewardship of the collection.
- Respectfully tend to the ways objects carry knowledge and participate in culture.
- Oversee care, conservation, display, lending, and general use of the Museum's global Indigenous art collection and its records, integrating standard museum practices with Indigenous care practices.
- Catalogue or supervise cataloguing for the global Indigenous art collection with a focus on inclusive cataloguing and working with museum colleagues and Indigenous community members to reconsider and update records and data management.
- Ensure that federal, state, and university regulations and policies relevant to the collections are followed, including those outlined in the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA).
- Work with Museum and University colleagues, such as the repatriation program manager, in addition to representatives of Indigenous communities, to monitor the progress and continue the repatriation of objects, including but not limited to those as specified under NAGPRA.
- Lead the Spencer Museum of Art team for NAGPRA and related claims research and resolution.
- Acquire historical and contemporary works of art for the collection, advise on deaccessioning, and maintain and develop relationships with dealers and donors.

Community Engagement and Teaching (20%)

- Assist and support in the revitalization and preservation of the culture and traditions of Indigenous peoples, connecting the vibrant lives of artists and communities with their artworks.
