Job Description Summary

The Department of History at Auburn University invites applications for a non-tenure-track instructor in Latin American history. The appointee will be responsible for teaching four courses per semester including an introductory-level survey of Latin American history, upper-level undergraduate classes in the field, and the department's two-semester core undergraduate sequence in World History. Area of specialization within Latin American history is open.

This is a 100% teaching appointment; no service or research will be expected or considered in evaluating the candidate for contract renewal. However, Auburn University is an R1 institution, and the Department of History supports research activity for its instructors by providing some travel and other professional development funds to instructors and other non-tenure-track faculty.

Minimum Qualifications

Ph.D. in History prior to employment is desired, but outstanding candidates who are in the final stages
